OUTSIDE THE BOX

On Saturday afternoon, February 17, over 100 neighbors from the South Madison and Roseway neighborhoods in Northeast Portland converged on 82nd at NE Siskiyou—at a property that developers would like the city to rezone to make way for a 240,000-square-foot development with 900 parking spaces.

Neighbors are opposed to such a large development, with some fearing that something like Wal-Mart—not to mention tons of traffic—is on the way. Instead, the neighbors—who donned cardboard boxes pasted with signs that read "Think Outside the Big Box," and protested on Saturday—would rather see "a lynchpin development that truly works for this neighborhood," according to neighborhood activist Dawn Tryon. AMY JENNIGES
